CHICAGO, IL – April 1, 2014

(Waterfront Productions) – Award winning filmmaker John Borowski tackles the controversial subject of murderabilia with the new release of Serial Killer Culture, his latest feature documentary film which examines the reasons why artists and collectors are fascinated by serial killers. Through music, painting, filmmaking, writing, and collecting, thirteen individuals are interviewed about creating art and searching for murderous artifacts.

“Through making films on the lives of early American serial killers, I discovered there was a serial killer culture and I decided to document some of the people who are instrumental in the culture of true crime.” Says Borowski.

The artists and collectors influential to the serial killer culture featured in the film are: Joe Coleman- Collector and Artist, Macabre- Murder Metal Band, Rick Staton- Collector, Hart Fisher- Publisher of the Dahmer Comic Book, Joe Hiles- Founder of Serial Killer Central, The Dahmer Tours, Sam Hane- U.K. Artist, Stephen Giannangelo- Author and Criminal Investigator, Sparzanza- Swedish Metal Band, Matthew Aaron- Owner of the Last Dime Museum, John Borowski- Filmmaker, David Van Gough- Painter/Artist of the Man/Son series, and true crime musicians The World Famous Crawlspace Brothers.

Serial Killer Culture marks the fourth feature documentary film for producer/writer/director John Borowski. The internationally acclaimed filmmaker has achieved acclaim for his provocative documentaries on early American serial killers H.H. Holmes, Albert Fish, and Carl Panzram, which can be viewed on DVD and via streaming on Netflix, Amazon, Youtube and itunes.
